

1. Principles

This fictional company policy sets out how advisers handle client information. Collect only the information that is needed for the task. Store client documents only in the approved platform. Never send client identity documents over personal messaging applications.

2. Changing bank details

A request to change a client's bank details is a high-risk request. The adviser must verify the request by telephoning the client on a number already held on file before the change is made. A bank details change must never be made only because of an email.

3. Record keeping

Client records are kept for the period set by the firm's compliance officer. Advisers must not delete client records themselves. Requests to see or correct personal information are passed to the compliance officer.
